Job growth

WHEN Ronald Lauder was asked to be U.S. Ambassador to Austria, his mother Estee, one of the most successful women in the world, was relieved to hear from friends that Vienna was a nice, quiet post. But things changed dramatically before Ronald, former Assistant Secretary of Defense, was sworn in yesterday by Secretary of State George Shultz. First, terrorists attacked the Vienna Airport. Then the ongoing flap over Kurt Waldheim's Nazi connections erupted. Among those at the swearing-in in Washington yesterday — including CIA director William Casey, USIA director Charles Z. Wick, Roy Cohn and his law partner Tom Bolan, Jerome Zipkin, Estee herself, Ron's wife Jo Carol and their three kids — the feeling was, as one put it: "He'll have more than the usual multitude of problems."
